KEEPS THE BOYS AT HOME.

Farmers' Association in Southern Illinois Has This Object for Its Principal Aim.

The continual exodus of boys from the farms of southern Illinois to the cities is being combated in this section of Egypt by a society bearing the name of Farmers' Relief association. The association is the outgrowth of an idea hatched in southern Illinois, and in the seven counties where the society is organized its effects are plainly seen, says the Chicago Inter Ocean. The rush of young men to St. Louis, Chicago and Cincinnati has been almost completely stayed. The farmers' boys are themselves members of the new organization, which has in a manner furnished attractions to rural life which largely offset the allurements of the city.

The Farmers' Relief association is modeled somewhat upon the lines of the trades union, and embodies some of the best and most reasonable features of former ill-born farmers' societies. The central idea of the association is to make country life attractive. The founder, James H. England, contended that if in each school district the families could be brought into closer social relations and the life given some little variety the problem would be solved.

The school district was made the unit in the plan. The school teacher was raised from mere pedagogue to social arbiter. He is called the chairman of the community committee, and he sees that there is always "some sort of do-in's," as the people say. The Wagner school district, a few miles south of Carbondale, is the best organized community. In the Wagner society every person in the district, transient or resident, is entitled to membership. To the social events of the district the rural pedagogue invites every man, woman and child. That means that there are no feuds, no quarrels, no wrangling. In the community, for all the people meet in a social way.

The society has gone further than this, and has installed a school district telephone system. An old lady who has nothing to do but darn heavy home-knit socks or sew carpet rags is the "hello girl." Each family in the district pays five dollars annually for the use of a telephone, and they use it. The young men do their courting over the telephone when the weather is bad, and the only complaint of the telephone service to be made so far was that one rainy night Cupid had connected so many of the subscribers that a very sick man could not get a message through to the doctor in Carbondale. The man did not die, however.

As soon as the telephone system was in working order the school teacher organized a string band. This country musical organization furnishes the music at the dances and the church so-called. The band has a repertoire that includes everything from "The Arkansas Traveler" to "Comin' Through the Rye," and there is hardly a night in a month that it is not engaged.

The Home league, the twin sister to the Farmers' association, is the woman's club of the country. It is conducted on the same lines as the clubs in the cities. It conducts a class in domestic science, and does its share of entertaining. The two organizations combined have hit the credit, or "on tick," system a knockout blow. If a member has anything to sell he must demand cash for it. If he buys he must pay cash.

The youngest pedagogue in Missouri, and perhaps in the United States, is teaching a country school near Gainesville, in the Ozark mountains. He is Glenn Harrison, aged 13 years, says the Kansas City Journal. Glenn is the oldest son of Guy T. Harrison, a lawyer.

He completed the course of study of the Gainesville public schools in March, 1902. The same month he took the examination given candidates for third grade teachers' certificates in Ozark county, making a good average and securing a certificate. He continued to study, and just after he became 13 years old he took the examination for a second grade certificate. This time his average grade was the highest made, being 96 per cent. Mr. Harrison believed his promising son was too young to teach, and refused to let him accept several offers. But one day when his father was absent attending court, Glenn took the job of teacher of a rural district, the directors of which came and offered him the place. He began work before his father returned, and the latter, finding him so ambitious, decided not to interfere.

Glenn now has 29 pupils. The majority are larger and older than he, but he maintains a degree of discipline which many older and more experienced teachers may well envy. "How are you getting along, Glenn?" asked his mother one day, when he came home at the end of a week's work. "I had to whip several of the boys," the youngster replied. It turned out that among others he had larruped an obstreperous youth that weighed 180 pounds. Glenn doesn't weigh much more than half that.

Everyone knows how to spell "hard water" with three letters, but probably some readers would be puzzled to spell "yesterday" with six. A Cincinnati girl could tell them how, according to the Enquirer.

She does not yet go to school, but is taught by her mother at home. The other night her father was hearing her spell. One word after another was successfully disposed of, and then he said: "Now, Annie, I am going to give you a hard one. If you spell it correctly I'll bring you some candy. How do you spell 'yesterday'?"

It was a hard one. Annie thought of the candy, and just then her eye caught the calendar hanging against the wall. Then she answered, with a smile of triumph: "F-r-i, yester, d-a-y, day, yesterday."
